CASTLE TAKEN BY G. J. GOULD IS IN BEAUTY SPOT OF SCOTLAND

Castle Grant, taken by George J. Gould and his bride for the shooting season. At left—Mrs. Gould.

lived nearby, including that patron saint of all Scotch Liberals, Sir Henry Campbell, a road mender, giving directions to the hotel. Marie Corelli also lived on Spey-side.

Castle Grant, was not the least impressed by the news of its coming tenant.

"Min' ye, we're nae sma' drink here in Grantown our ainseels!" was the old man's comment.

And at the next turning a tramp laborer, with nothing to his name but a bundle of deer horns, probably picked up as he came through Abernethy forest that morning, remarked philosophically: "Weel, a man is nae thocht much of noo-days unless he has a wheen of pounds."

The main four story front of the castle makes three sides of a quadrangle with its lower wings. The south front, still showing the fifteenth century workmanship, is interesting and elegant.

Among the notable pictures are Vandyck's "Charles I. and Henrietta" in France" taking leave of his Queen, by Rubens. This room also contains a Guido Reni, many excellent copies of the Italian masters and family portraits by Kneller, West, Ramsay and Allan.

The most interesting pieces in the drawing room are eight small paintings by Vandyck and his original pencil sketch for the portrait of Charles I. In the staircase are hung a Titian and a Corregio, while various other rooms contain some fine seascapes by Vandermeere, a "Holy Family" by Perugino, fine family portraits by Sir Peter Lely and Watt and a large number of copies of classic subjects.

The house also contains a fine collection of classical and medieval armor and weapons, and grinning hideously amidst them is a grim reminder of the days when castles in Scotland were built for more than grouse shooting. It is a skull of a Comyn, vanquished and slain in battle by an early ancestor of the House of Grant.

Mr. Gould's bride will find herself amidst some of the loveliest scenery of Scotland and be surrounded by one of Scotland's best private collections of pictures. The hoath clad Cairngorms lie to the south and the castle grounds, magnificently timbered, run down to the rippling, musical Spey.

Grantown, founded by the Seafield family in 1766, is, as Scotch towns go, a modern one, and, like Kirkcaldy, a "lang town." Its people are not the least bit excited about the coming of a wealthy American. Andrew Carnegie once lived at Cluny Castle, a few miles to the south, before he bought Sibo Castle. And other famous people have

Atlantic City Host To Another Huge Week-End Throng

Convention on Oil Pollution Brings Delegates From Many Points Along the Coast.

Special Dispatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD. ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 12.—The arrival of three sixteen day excursion trains of three sections each from Pennsylvania and the South, the presence here of representatives from all Atlantic coast States from Florida to Maine to discuss the ocean oil pollution question, the steady outpour of visitors on 100 daily trains that come to this city and the contribution of innumerable motor cars make this resort assured of another lively week end.

The sea has maintained an average temperature of 74 degrees all this week and the sand has been packed with bathers, many of whom spend most of the day on the sands or in the waves. Last week Chalfonte and Haddon Hall alone had more than 1,200 guests, and the business of the hotel and hostelry has reached a high mark.

The Ocean City toll bridge will be abolished on August 15 and thereafter there will be no hindrance to traffic all along the coast to Cape May.

Next month will be a lively one for this resort. Beginning with Labor Day there will be the fall pageant, the convention of the Lighting Division of the World War, the convention of the Military Order of the World War, the convention of the International Typographical Union and the grand American hand-drap for trashshooters, besides numerous smaller gatherings at the avenue hotels.

New York residents at the Ritz-Carlton were joined during the week by Miss Irene Wallace, Mr. and Mrs. Hale Hamilton, D. Peyton Berens, Mrs. E. P. Perry, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Fox, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Graham, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Bowman, Mr. and Mrs. I. D. Brockway, Miss Jean Raymond and Mrs. J. B. M. Hamilton.
